

Welcome to the PEACE party

Imagine this exhibition is a party where people have come to meet one another for the first time. Your goal at this party of portraits is to get to know at least five people, learn about their lives and what they think peace means. Each portrait contains a short biographical sketch and a personal peace statement.

Breaking the Ice

Look around at all of the portraits. Is there a face that interests you and makes you want to meet that person?

Before reading the biography, please write their name down:

1) _____

Now read through the biography and Peace statement. In three words or less, please describe how this person understands peace:

- _____
- _____
- _____

Greet a Friendly Face

Now look for somebody that you think shares a characteristic with you (i.e. gender, hair color, skin tone, age). Write down their name:

2) _____

What was the similarity? _____

Please read their peace statement and then the biography.

What surprised you about their peace view or their life?

- _____
- _____
- _____

Drinking some punch

For your next meeting look for a portrait featuring a person that has at least one characteristic that at first sight makes you look different from each other. What is their name?

3) _____

What was the difference?

Please read their biography and then the peace statement. Do you think that the “difference” you chose influenced this person’s peace statement? If so, in what way?

- _____
- _____
- _____

Give Peace a Chance

Time to dance

For the next person, please start at your current portrait and move in any direction past five portraits. Who is the person in front of you?

4) _____

Before you start reading about them, please look closely at the portrait. What are the first three words that come to mind?

- _____
- _____
- _____

Now read the words on the panel. If you could ask her/him one question, what would it be?

- _____
- _____
- _____